

Commission Selected By Governors to Pick Dixie's Highway Route

PROBE OF M. A. STARTED BY SUIT OF MRS. TABARINI

CHIEF IN CONFERENCE WITH CITY ATTORNEY

If He Finds Alleged Partners Were Sharing Profits Derived From Club, Chief Believes He Has Ground For Legal Action.

What is believed to be a first step in the direction of club reform, as the police was taken by Chief Beavers yesterday when he began a personal investigation into the connection of Mrs. Minnie Tabarini with the Theatrical Mechanical Association club, which she recently put into the hands of a temporary receiver.

The investigation was prompted by Mrs. Tabarini's application for receiver in the case which she filed yesterday afternoon in the superior court, in which she alleges that the club is being operated for the purpose of conducting a social club. The chief is probing her affiliations with the club, which she claims to be a business, and to derive revenue for Mrs. Tabarini and her alleged partner, Thomas McMillan.

It is in inquiry disclosed evidence to this effect, the chief stated to a reporter yesterday afternoon, that Mrs. Tabarini had made drastic action. He will not, however, seek to close the club under its present administration, as it is being operated by the superior court. T. J. Ripley, who was appointed temporary receiver by Judge George Bell Wednesday.

Mrs. Tabarini's suit. Action could only be taken against Mrs. Tabarini and her alleged partner, McMillan. The sensational plea for receivership, filed Wednesday by Mrs. Tabarini, charged McMillan with disloyalty to trust, misappropriation of funds and mismanagement.

But the phase of the petition which caused the chief to take action was a paragraph in which Mrs. Tabarini asserted that she and McMillan were co-partners in the operation of the Theatrical Mechanical Association club, which has been in existence for at least three years. The chief went to the sheriff's office in the courthouse, where he called for the petition and copied the paragraph pertaining to the co-partnership.

From the courthouse he went to the office of City Attorney James L. May, where he held a conference with the attorney. May gave him the version of the club's operation, and McMillan was proved to be a partner in the operation of the club, and that he was in the club, and was able to prove to the chief that the club was a business.

The chief is also said to have conferred with Mayor Woodruff upon the matter.

The chief is carrying on the investigation into the case of the club, and is expected to report to the board of police commissioners on the matter. He has had little to say upon the subject of the club, and has been busy with other matters.

He was making the probe, and that action against the man and woman would be taken, in event his investigation disclosed that they were operating the club as a business.

The liquor elements, according to the ruling given the chief by Attorney May, provide that prohibition is not in force in cases where individual or collective rain is derived from liquor clubs, and in all cases except where such institutions are conducted for mutual benefit of the membership.

The T. M. A. is a popular downtown club, and is the center of the house and stage employees of the theater. It is frequented by actors and actresses, and has been the scene of many recent theatrical affairs. It occupies a second story of a building on Forsyth near Luckie street.

Mrs. Tabarini's suit was filed, she alleges, because of the inability of the club to pay its bills, and on account of ill health to attend to her business. She claims that she and McMillan had taken advantage of her absence to misappropriate funds and to mismanage the club.

She granted a temporary receiver and set the case for a hearing on April 5.

CLEMENCY IS REFUSED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

Washington, April 2.—President Wilson has decided not to grant pardon to J. R. Markley, W. H. Armstrong, Jr., and Edward J. R. Miller and J. M. McMillan, connected with the International Lumber and Building company, and under sentence by the federal court in Philadelphia for conspiracy to defraud through use of the mails.

The president, on March 10, the day the five were to begin serving their terms, announced that he had granted a reprieve for thirty days. The decision of justice recently began a collection of facts in connection with the case, pending the decision whether pardons should be given. The president, however, has taken a slow and steady interest in the case, and stood to have reached his own decision.

Two Commissioners Each Are to Be Appointed by Chief Executives of Seven States Traversed.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM SHOWN AT MEETING

That Highway Will Pass Through the Gate City Seems to Be Assured in Any Event.

BY NED WINTHROP,
Special Staff Correspondent.
Chattanooga, Tenn., April 2.—(Special.)—Selection of the route of the projected Dixie highway from Chicago to Miami, Fla., was left to a commission of fourteen men by the conference of governors and road advocates which met here today to discuss the movement for the construction of the road. Two commissioners each are to be appointed by the governors of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia and Florida, the states through which the road will extend.

The governor of Georgia announced that the appointment of a clerk Howell, editor of The Atlanta Constitution, and W. T. Anderson, office of the seven incorporation of the Dixie highway through Georgia.

No Vote for Incorporation.
When the conference met in the afternoon at the Hotel Hamilton, the opposition, the conference defeated a motion to give a vote in the routing of the seven incorporation of the Dixie highway through Georgia. The motion was introduced by the Dixie Highway association, representing the founders of the organization. The motion precipitated a debate which threw the conference in an uproar. The governor explained that the founders were men from many states who had agreed to contribute to the highway fund, and they asserted their belief that only citizens of the state affected should have a voice in the routing of the road.

The conference also voted down a resolution to have Alabama included in the list of states to be governed by the highway fund. The conference, however, did not vote on this matter.

The conference was held at the Hotel Hamilton, and was attended by representatives of the Dixie Highway association, the governors of the seven states, and other interested parties.

Great Boost for Highway.
The conference voted tonight with a banquet with representatives of the Dixie Highway association, and a most enthusiastic boost for the highway. The conference also voted to have the highway fund established in the state of Georgia, and to have the highway fund established in the state of Georgia.

The conference also voted to have the highway fund established in the state of Georgia, and to have the highway fund established in the state of Georgia.

THE DEAD SEA OF IDLENESS

The wise Franklin described idleness as the dead sea of business.

Only those merchants forge the front who have the wisdom to rise to their opportunities.

A good business man gets trade by going after it. He runs his business "on the square," and practices honesty in his advertising.

Honest advertising is most productive when used in The Atlanta Constitution.

14 CASES OF BURGLARY KEEP POLICE WORKING

Woman Loses Purse to a Snatch Thief Near Alley Where Plainclothes Men Had Been Stationed by Chief Beavers.

Fourteen burglaries reported Saturday, eight of which took place during last night before 10 o'clock, a daring robbery, in which the victim was beaten unconscious, and is now in a dying condition at Grady's hospital, was reported by Chief Beavers, who said that the robbery took place on the corner of Whitehall street, where two plainclothes policemen were posted to keep the peace, and the robbery was committed by two men, who were seen to enter the house of the victim, and to leave with a large sum of money and a pistol.

Only one suspect has been arrested by the police, and the robbery is being treated as a case of burglary. The victim, a woman, was seen to enter the house, and to leave with a large sum of money and a pistol. The robbery was committed by two men, who were seen to enter the house, and to leave with a large sum of money and a pistol.

Police Were Stationed There.
Eight successful snatch-thief robberies have taken place in the city, and the police are working to keep the peace. The robbery was committed by two men, who were seen to enter the house, and to leave with a large sum of money and a pistol.

Four Years of Continuous Fighting and Pillage Have Almost Entirely Destroyed Agriculture.

Mexico City, March 25.—(By Courier.)—El Paso, Texas, April 3.—A report circulating that Mexico faces a serious situation respecting her food supplies has been made by a committee of American and foreign experts here after an investigation of the situation. The report in part says:

"Four years of almost continuous fighting has wrought a condition in the food supply situation so serious as to threaten a famine threatening world-wide aid. Farms have been burned, and the animals have been killed, and the crops have been destroyed, and the people have been driven from their homes, and the people have been driven from their homes, and the people have been driven from their homes."

SOLDIERS ARE TAKEN FROM THE WEST FRONT TO OPPOSE RUSSIANS

German General Staff Also Seems to Be Uneasy Over the Activity of the Russian Forces Along the East Prussian Frontier—Desultory Fighting Continues on the Western Front.

ITS DENIED THAT AUSTRIA
SUES FOR SEPARATE PEACE.

Amsterdam, April 2.—(Via London.) April 4, 1915, a.m.—It is officially denied at Vienna that Austria has opened negotiations with Russia for a separate peace.

London, April 3.—The German army is pouring reinforcements into Hungary to support the Austrian army, which is being driven from the passes of the Carpathians, and also, according to dispatches from Holland, again sending men from Belgium to strengthen their eastern front, where the Russians have taken the offensive.

The battle in the Carpathians continues by night and day. The Russians, continually reinforced, are desperate to force Uman and Lemberg, and upon the slopes of the Carpathians, where the Russian army is waiting for the offensive.

At any rate, they have, say Dutch correspondents, depleted the German army in Belgium and in the central portion of the front, and the German army is being driven from the passes of the Carpathians, and also, according to dispatches from Holland, again sending men from Belgium to strengthen their eastern front, where the Russians have taken the offensive.

SNOW, RAIN AND WIND PREVAILED FROM NORTH FLORIDA TO MAINE—THE WIND BLEW WITH CYCLONIC VELOCITY.

Washington, April 2.—The weather bureau tonight promised relief for tomorrow's Easter family from the fierce storm which held the entire Atlantic seaboard in a wintry grip today. Fair weather in the south and central states and clearing weather in the north and New England was forecast after a day of snow, rain and sleet.

Weather bureau officials said that while the Eastern snowstorm was not unaccompanied, so general a fall of snow in April was unusual. The disturbance reigned from northern Florida to Maine and brought with it winds that carried with them blowing cyclonic velocity. A gale of seventy-two miles an hour was recorded off Cape Henry, and the storm was central over the Virginia Capes and by the time the storm had reached Cape Cod late tonight it carried with it blowing cyclonic velocity. About fifteen miles of snow was reported at Philadelphia.

State-Wide Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign to Be Launched By W. G. Raoul Foundation

A plan to organize the cities and towns of Georgia for a unified crusade against tuberculosis will be set on foot under way tomorrow when James W. G. Raoul foundation, will leave Atlanta for Albany, Valdosta, Waycross, Brunswick and Savannah. Beginning in the southern part of the state he expects to visit and effect organizations as rapidly as possible in every city and town of over 1,000 inhabitants.

The Raoul foundation was established in 1912 by James W. G. Raoul, who left $100,000 to be used in anti-tuberculosis work in Georgia. Mr. P. C. Hodgson, J. K. Otley, R. J. Quinn, T. K. Glenn and Joseph A. McCord were named the trustees of the foundation in his will. The foundation was immediately organized and a general survey of conditions in Georgia was made. It was found that there were approximately 5,000 deaths annually in Georgia from tuberculosis, a ratio about equal to that of other states, and that facilities for adequately combating the disease, except in Atlanta, for education along preventive sanitary lines, were very much needed.

Paulkner Chosen Head.
After this preliminary work, which was done thoroughly, the trustees set about finding a man to lead the crusade in Georgia. After consulting with United States Commissioner of Education P. C. Claxton and other leaders in touch with the national situation, they finally fixed upon James P. Paulkner, director of exhibits and head of the lecture work connected with the Kentucky tuberculosis commission, which is a state institution. After going into the Georgia situation thoroughly, Mr. Paulkner resigned his Kentucky office. He came to Atlanta a few weeks ago and has already completely reorganized the office of the Raoul foundation, which is at 385 Canton building.

Mr. Paulkner was the pioneer in anti-tuberculosis work in Kentucky and the work he did prior to the establishment of the Kentucky commission, in traveling around that state giving wagon stereoscopic lectures, forms an interesting chapter in the history of the anti-tuberculosis fight in America. It was as the result of his personal activity that the Kentucky commission was organized and through his efforts that the state fitted out a railroad exhibit car.

Plans for Campaign.
In his plans for a state-wide organized anti-tuberculosis fight in Georgia, Mr. Paulkner plans to work in harmony and co-operation with the two existing associations, the Atlanta Anti-Tuberculosis association and the Savannah Anti-Tuberculosis association, and with the state board of health and local state boards. By Mr. Harris of the state board, has already organized the movement.

"In organizing the state for this campaign," says Mr. Paulkner, "my purpose is to select in each city a representative of not fewer than five representative people, who will be the local representatives of the foundation. Local offices will be established which it is expected to make self-supporting. It is my plan to personally visit each of these offices, and to have the local organizations will be supported by funds raised locally, by various means such as the Christmas tree campaigns, by subscriptions, tag days, social appropriations and by help from city council and county boards where that can be obtained. We expect to have a nurse working regularly in connection with each of these city committees and to establish local offices as rapidly as possible. A thorough indication of the work throughout the state is our aim, and annual meetings will be held.

Later we hope to equip a railroad exhibit car as was done in Kentucky and in the meantime, I am planning to deliver special lectures in many parts of the state in both large and small communities.

Free Literature.
It is our plan at once to make this office a clearing house of information and help in the fight for public health against tuberculosis in Georgia. We are rapidly receiving and standardizing the literature on the subject, and pamphlets and other literature will be made free to all who write or call. All communications should be addressed to the W. G. Raoul foundation, 385 Canton building, Atlanta, Ga. In addition to sending this literature we will gladly answer letters giving personal direction both to individuals and local organizations. We will furnish free advice as to exhibits and methods of carrying on local campaigns, and will direct and help the local rate of character, as scale. The Raoul foundation, of course, has had the Christmas season in charge since its organization.

"The cities which I am planning to visit first to aid in the organization

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS

If your Back is aching or Bladder bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and back feels sore don't get scared and look for your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your house clean by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which relaxes the body's urinous system, stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 50 grains of acid and waste, so you can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithium and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending kidney weakness. It is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delicious effervescent lithia water drink, which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try the salt in the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what has troubled your kidney trouble and backache.

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, APRIL 4, 1915.

EN the fair Lady Spring doth rise
 With earth's new morning in her eyes,—
 To the love-lyrics of glad rills;
 And silver trumpets of the hills;
 And, bending o'er the violets sweet,
 Listens—and hears the world's heart beat,
 Ah, well-a-day where Love hath sway,—
 Love bringeth hearts high holiday!

SWEETHEART of all the world she seems
 As, stepping forth from rainbow-dreams,
 Her showery tresses bright-unrolled,
 She grants Love's lips their rippled gold!
 The birds, breast-deep in blooms above her,
 In sweetest song tell how they love her.
 Ah, well-a-day! For Love hath sway!—
 Love bringeth hearts high holiday!

Social Side of the Opera To Surpass in Brilliance That of Any Other Season

The Atlanta Music Festival association's entertainment committee, of which Mr. H. M. Atkinson is chairman, completed yesterday a schedule of elaborate social affairs for opera week which will rival in brilliancy the grand opera itself.

On Monday evening, April 26, after the opera, the Capital City club will be the host at an elaborate banquet given in honor of the directors of the Music Festival association and the "defectors and stars of the Metropolitan Opera company." These special guests will sit at a magnificent decorated central table. It is hoped that the Otto Kahn and other distinguished members of the Metropolitan board will be among the guests. Numbers of other beautiful parties are being arranged for this same occasion.

On Tuesday night, April 27, when there will be no opera, the Piedmont Civic club will give a dinner-dance in honor of the Atlanta Music Festival association and the officials and stars of the Metropolitan company. On Wednesday at noon there will be an elaborate garden party and barbecue in honor of the opera stars, the officials and Atlanta directors at the Brook Hills Golf club, and preparations are being made to make this the most attractive and beautiful outdoor party ever held in the south. On Wednesday night after the opera there will be a supper and dancing at the Capital City club, on this occasion members are supposed to make their own reservations and entertain their own guests. On Thursday night when there will be no opera there will be a brilliant dinner-dance at the Druid Hills Golf

THIRD INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

In her apartment, the girl Ella, daughter of Lord Ashleigh, is murdered. The New York police place the case in the hands of Sanford Quest, known and feared as the master criminologist of the world. He takes Lenora, Ella's maid, to his headquarters and through hypnotism and the use of electro-telepathic appliances discovers her connection with the crime, recovers the diamonds and arrests the murderer, Mardougal. Lenora's husband, though nearly trapped in his death in a tough tenement house while engaged in the work, Lenora befriends one of Quest's assistants. The detective is called in to investigate the theft of the skeleton of an ape, presented to the museum by Professor Ashleigh, brother of Lord Ashleigh. Mardougal escapes while on his way to prison, a serious diamond is mysteriously stolen from Mrs. Rheinholdt during a reception.

THE POCKET WIRELESS

CHAPTER VIII.

Mr. Sanford Quest sat in his favorite easy chair, his cigar inclined toward the left-hand corner of his mouth, his attention riveted upon a small instrument which he was supporting upon his knee. He glanced across the room to where Lenora was bending over her desk.

"We've done it this time, young woman," he declared triumphantly. "It's all O. K., working like a little peach."

Lenora rose and came toward him.

"Is that the pocket wireless?"

He nodded.

"I've had Morrison out at Harlem all the morning to test it," he told her. "I've sent him at least half a dozen messages from this easy chair, and got the replies. How are you getting on with the code?"

"Not so badly for a stupid person," Lenora replied.

Laura, who had been busy with some papers at the farther end of the room, came over and joined them.

"Say, it's a dandy little affair, that Mr. Quest," she exclaimed. "I had a try with it, a day or so ago. Jim spoke to me from Fifth avenue."

"We've got it tuned to a shade now," Quest declared. "Equipped with this simple little device, you can speak to me from anywhere up to ten or a dozen miles."

Quest rose to his feet and moved restlessly about the room.

"Say, girls," he confessed, "this is the first time in my life I have been in a fix like this. Two cases on hand and nothing working with either of them. Criminologist, indeed! Whose box is this?"

Quest had paused suddenly in front of an oak sideboard which stood against the wall. Occupying a position upon it of some prominence was a small black box, whose presence there seemed to him unfamiliar. Laura came over to his side and looked at it also in puzzled fashion.

"Never saw it before in my life," she answered. Quest grinned.

"Him! No one else has been in the room, and it hasn't been empty for more than ten minutes," he remarked. "Well, let's see what's inside, anyway."

He lifted off the lid. There was nothing in the interior but a sheet of paper folded up. Quest smoothed it out with his hand. They all leaned over and read the following words, written in an obviously disguised hand.

You are embarked on a new stupor-anthology. What characteristic strikes you most forcibly in connection with it?

"A most daring one, anyway," Quest declared. "If we could answer your question, Laura, we could solve the whole riddle. We are up against something, and no mistake."

"The hand which wrote that box here," Quest continued slowly, "is capable of even more wonderful things. We must be cautious. Hello!"

The door had opened. The professor stood upon the threshold.

"I trust that I have done right in coming up?" he inquired.

"Quite right, professor," Quest assured him. "They know well enough downstairs that I am always at liberty to go. Come in."

"I am so anxious to learn," the professor continued, eagerly, "whether there is any news—of my skeleton?"

"Not yet, professor, I am sorry to say," Quest replied. "Come in and shut the door."

"There is a young lady here," he said, "who's caught me up upon the landing. She, too, I believe, wishes to see you."

He threw open the door and stood on one side. A young woman came a little hesitatingly into the room. Her hair was plainly brushed back, and she wore the severe dress of the Salvation Army.

"Want to see me, young lady?" Quest asked. She held out a book.

"My name is Miss Quigg," she said. "I want to ask you for a subscription to our funds."

Quest frowned a little.

"Very well, Miss Quigg, you shall have a donation. I am busy today, but call at the same hour tomorrow and my secretary here shall have a check ready for you."

The girl smiled her gratitude.

The professor laid his hand upon her arm as she passed.

"Young lady," he observed, "you seem very much in earnest about your work."

"It is only the people in earnest, sir," she answered, "who can do any good in the world. My work is worth being in earnest about."

"You compel my admiration—my most respectful admiration. May I, too, be permitted?"

He drew out a pocketbook and passed over toward her a little stack of notes.

"It is so kind of you," he murmured. "We never have any hesitation in accepting money. May I know your name?"

"It is not necessary," the professor answered.

"You can enter me," he added, as he held open the door for her, "as a friend—or would you prefer a pseudonym?"

"A pseudonym, if you please," she begged. "We have so many who send up sums of money as friends. Anything will do."

The professor glanced around the room.

"What pseudonym shall I adopt?" he ruminated. "Shall I say that an oak sideboard gives you five hundred dollars? Or a Chippendale sofa? Or," he added, his eyes resting for a moment upon the little box, "a black box?"

The two girls from the other side of the table started. Even Quest swung suddenly around. The professor, as though pleased with his fancy, nodded as his fingers played with the lid.

"Yes, that will do very nicely," he decided. "Put me down—Black Box, five hundred dollars."

The girl took out her book and began to write. The professor, with a little farewell bow, crossed the room toward Quest. Lenora moved toward the door.

"Let me see you out," she said to the girl pleasantly.

Lenora opened the door. Both girls started. Only a few feet away Craig was standing, his head a little thrust forward. For a moment the quiet self-respect of his manner seemed to have deserted him. He seemed at a loss for words.

"What do you want?" Lenora demanded.

"I was waiting for my master," Craig explained. "Why not downstairs?" Lenora asked suspiciously.

"You did not come up with him."

"I am driving the professor in his automobile," Craig explained. "It occurred to me that if he were going to be long here I should have time to go and now. Say, French, where did you say that was found?"

"Just outside the professor's back gate," French grunted. "But you're not kidding me—"

"It's a finger from the professor's skeleton you've got there," Quest interrupted.

Quest hung up the receiver. Then he turned toward his two assistants.

"Another finger from the professor's skeleton," he announced, "has been found just outside his grounds. What do you suppose that means?"

"Craig," Lenora declared confidently.

"Craig on your life," Laura echoed. "Say, Mr. Quest, I've got an idea."

Quest nodded.

"Get right ahead with it."

"Didn't the butter at Mrs. Rheinholdt's say that Craig belonged to a servant's club up town? I know the place well. Let me go and see if I can't join and pick up a little information about the man. He must have a night out sometimes. Let's find out what he does. How's that?"

"Capital!" Quest agreed. "Get along, Laura. And you, Lenora," he added, "put on your hat. We'll take a ride towards Mayton avenue."

CHAPTER IX.

The exact spot where the bone of the missing skeleton was discovered, was easily located. It was about twenty yards from a gate which led into the back part of the professor's grounds. Quest wanted very little time before arriving at a decision.

The discovery of the bone so near the professor's house," he decided, "cannot be coincidence a club, and gripped it. Quest drew a long breath. His eyes were set hard.

"Drop that club," he ordered.

The creature suddenly sprang up. The club was waved around his head.

"Drop it," Quest repeated firmly. "You will sit down in your corner. You will sleep."

The club slipped from the hairy fingers. The tense frame, which had been already crouched for the spring was suddenly relaxed.

They found nothing unusual until they came to the distant corner, where a huge piano box lay on its side with the opening turned to the wall.

"This is where the brute sleeps, I suppose," Quest remarked. "We'll turn it around anyway."

They dragged it a few feet away from the wall, so that the opening faced them. Then Lenora gave a little cry and Quest stood suddenly still.

"The skeleton!" Lenora shrieked. "It's the skeleton!"

It was a skeleton so old that the bones had turned a dull gray. Quest glanced towards the hands.

"Little fingers both missing," he muttered. "Remember the message!" she exclaimed.

"Where the skeleton is, the necklace may be also," Quest nodded shortly.

"Well search."

They turned over everything in the place fruitlessly. There was no sign of the necklace.

"Get outside, Lenora," Quest directed. "I'll just bring this beast round again and then we'll tackle the professor."

Quest turned towards the creature which crouched still huddled up in its corner.

"Look at me," he ordered.

The creature obeyed. Once more its frame seemed to grow more virile and natural.

"You need sleep no longer," Quest said. "Wake up and be yourself."

The effect of his words was instantaneous. Almost as he spoke, the creature crouched for a

"Where? Where exactly did you find it?" the professor insisted.

"I found it in a hut," Quest said, "hidden in a piano box. I found there, also, a creature—a human being, I must call him—in a state of captivity."

"Hidden in a piano box?" the professor repeated wonderingly. "Why, you mean in Hartoo's sleeping box, then?"

"If Mr. Hartoo is the gentleman who tried to club me, you are right," Quest admitted. "Mr. Ashleigh, before we go any further I must ask you for an explanation as to the presence of that person in your grounds?"

The professor hesitated for a moment. Then he slowly crossed the room, opened the drawer of a small escritoire, and drew out a letter.

"You have heard of Sir William Haysmore, the president of the Royal Society?" he asked. Quest nodded.

"This letter is from him," the professor continued. "You had better read it."

The criminologist read it aloud. Lenora looked over his shoulder:

To Prof. Edgar Ashleigh, New York.

My dear Professor: Your restaurant gratifies me immensely. I can say no more. It tells you of the greatest discovery since the dark ages. Now you are in a position to give to the world a definite and exact explanation of the missing link. Let me give you one word of warning, professor, before I write you at greater length on this subject. Anthropologists have effected more, even than any other race of scientific men, the discovery of the missing link. Just the heart of this discovery should be stolen from you.

WILLIAM HAYSMORE.

The professor nodded deliberately as Quest finished the letter.

"Now, perhaps, you can understand," he said, "why it was necessary to keep Hartoo absolutely hidden. In a month's time my papers will be ready. Then I shall electrify the world. I shall write not a new page but a new volume across the history of science. I shall—"

The door was suddenly thrown open. Craig sprang in, no longer the self-contained, perfect manservant, but with the face of some wild creature. His shout was one almost of agony.

"The hut, professor! The hut is on fire!" he cried.

His appearance on the threshold was like a flash. They heard his flying feet down the hall, and without a moment's hesitation they all followed. The professor led the way down a narrow passage, past a row of doors, and then reached a little clearing in which the hut was situated. They were unable to approach any nearer. The place was a whirlwind of flame. The smell of kerosene was almost overpowering. The wild yell of the leopard rose above the strange, half-human gibbering of the monkeys and the hoarse, bass calling of another voice, at the sound of which Lenora and even Quest shuddered. Then, as they came, breathless, to a standstill, they saw a strange sight. One side of the hut fell in, and almost immediately the leopard with a mighty spring, leaped from the place and ran howling into the undergrowth. The monkeys followed but they came straight for the professor, wringing their hands. They fawned at his feet as though trying to show him their scorched bodies. Then for a single moment they saw the face of the ape-man as he struggled to follow the others. His strength failed him, however. He fell backwards into the burning chasm.

The professor bade them farewell, an hour later, on the steps of the house. He seemed suddenly to have looked back.

"You have done your best, Mr. Quest," he said, "but fate has been too strong. Remember this, though. It is quite true that the cunning of Hartoo may have made it possible for him to have stolen the skeleton and to have brought it back to its hiding-place, but it was jealousy—cruel, brutal, fond jealousy which sneered the walls of that hut with kerosene and set light to it. The work of a lifetime, my dreams of scientific immortality, have vanished to those flames."

He turned slowly away from them and re-entered the house. Quest and Lenora made their way down the avenue and entered the automobile which was waiting for them, almost in silence. The latter glanced toward his companion, as they drove off.

"Say, this has been a bit tough for you," he remarked. "I'll have to call somewhere and get you a glass of wine."

She tried to smile but her strength was almost gone. They drove to a restaurant and sat there for some little time. Lenora soon recovered her color. She even had courage to speak of the events of the afternoon when they re-entered the automobile.

"Mr. Quest," Lenora murmured, "who do you suppose burned the hut down?"

"If I don't say Craig, I suppose you will," he remarked. "I wonder whether Laura's had any luck."

They were greeted, as they entered Quest's room, by a familiar little ticking. Quest smiled with pleasure.

"It's the pocket wireless," he declared. "Let me take down the message."

He opened it out to Lenora, who stood by his side:

Have Jellied Servants' Club disguised as your butler. Craig frequent visitor here ten years ago, comes now occasionally. Thursday evenings post lively time. Shall wait here on chance of seeing him.

"Good girl, that," Quest remarked. "She's a real one."

Quest took the box into his hands and removed the lid. It seemed half full of cotton-wool. On the top were a few lines of writing and beneath them the signature of the parted hands. He read the form out slowly:

Drop all investigation. The hands that return these are the hands that return these.

Quest raised the cotton-wool. Beneath lay Mrs. Rheinholdt's necklace!

Knockout Brown v. Leo Houck At Bijou Theater Thursday

Two heavy middleweights are due in Atlanta tomorrow from other parts. George Knockout Brown, the husky Chicago middleweight and Leo Houck, of Philadelphia, are the parties referred to.

Brown and Houck have a little ring quarrel to settle in this city. They are billed to clash in a ten-round bout at the Bijou theater Thursday night and some scrap it should be a very interesting one.

Brown will arrive here from Chicago. The Greek party makes his home in the Windy City, where there are many fans, especially those who think the K. O. puncher can beat any middleweight in the country over the twenty-round route.

Houck is due here from New York. He will be accompanied by Lou Dierker, his manager. The pair were promoted Mike said that they left the city of the Big Apple, where they will bring them in Atlanta some time Sunday morning.

Local fans are showing much interest in the fight and they have a right, too. It has been years since boxing fans have been treated to a fight between two star middleweights, and these boys are rated with the very best of them.

It has long been known that any time Knockout Brown steps into the ring fans are assured of a real battle. He is much liked here, and then, but what the fans want is a real scrap and it is not always the boxers who draw the money. Freddie Welsh is a champion, still fight fans seldom flock to see him in action. His fancy style of boxing does not appeal to the average fan.

Brown is a fighter of the hitting school. Once in the ring, all he knows is fight. He is a bear at swinging punches and it would not be surprising if either he or Houck hit the canvas before the finish.

Leo Houck need take nothing from Brown when it comes to boasting of ring record. The Philadelphia has shaken through such stars as Jimmy Gardner, Jimmy Clabby, Eddie McKee, George Chip, Frank Klann, Billy Pupke, Billy Murray and a heap of others. He too, is said to be a very satisfactory fighter.

Brown and Houck will finish training for the scrap here. The Chicagoan will pitch his training camp at the Metropolitan club, where he will work with the best local boys obtainable. Houck will do his training at the Bijou theater.

Mike said is the busiest party in Atlanta. He has placed his bets on all the fights and reports the betting odds are coming fast. They can be purchased at the local cigar store and at these places. Tickets will sell for 50 cents to $1.00. Ring-side seats sell for $2. All pinkie seats have been elevated, the same as they were at the Abel-Hanlon bout.

Manual training schools in the United States numbered 274 in 1912, with 6,839 students.

BAPTISTS BEATEN BY GEORGINIAN

Red and Black Take Advantage of Battery Errors and Secure Revenge—The Score, 3 to 2.

By Charles R. Conner.

Macon, Ga., April 3.—(Special.)—Georgia defeated Mercer this afternoon by the score of 3 to 2. Corley and Hunt both pitched brilliant ball, it being just anybody's game from the beginning to the end. Errors, together with wild pitches, were responsible for the victory by Georgia.

In the fifth Holden struck out but was safe at first when Clements let the strike get away from him. Holden was forced by Nunnally when the latter hit to the pitcher. Corley struck out to left and on Gibson's error went to second, while Nunnally scored from third, where he had gone on a wild pitch, when Clements threw to second.

Mercer came back in the sixth and scored two when Dewberry was walked. Hunt singled, sending him to third. From there he scored on Swann's sacrifice out, second to first. Hunt going to third, where he was scored on Hawes' single to center.

The old ball game was stepped up when in the last half of the ninth Henderson, first man out, was walked on a strike-out that got away from the catcher. He was advanced to third when Hitchcock grounded out to first and scored on Gibson's wild pitch to left.

modules and grounds and make other such necessary arrangements for the holding of the games.

Every boy desiring to play baseball is urged to be present this morning. The officers and promoters of this association will again meet at 10:30 a.m. today noon. At this meeting all Sunday school superintendents and those interested in the athletic life for the boys are urged to be present.

Dr. Marion McEl Hill, of the North Avenue Presbyterian church, was appointed chairman of a committee to arrange for a meeting at 10:30 a.m. of the athletic division, at which time a similar organization will be formed and a senior baseball league launched.

Just as soon as all baseball arrangements have been completed and the schedule begun the officials of the association will begin to lay plans for the conducting of a tennis tournament, the outdoor athletic meet, a swimming meet and possibly an indoor football league. It is the desire of the board of governors of this association to give the members of the Sunday school an opportunity to compete in all forms of athletic sports.

FIELD DAY AT L. G. I.

Charles White, of Atlanta, Is the Winner.

Locus Grove, Ga., April 2.—(Special.) The students of Locus Grove Institute today celebrated their annual track meet between the two rival Philomatheans and Philosophian literary societies.

The Mathians, succeeded in qualifying in the large number of events, winning ninety-five points against forty-six obtained by the other society. Charles White, a Macon boy and son of Dr. White, of the Atlanta Tabernacle, was the individual point winner, scoring twenty-two points. Peyton Orlin led for the Sophians society with eleven points. Among the others who proved successful in the races were Hogan, Gray, Montgomery, Moore, Price and Pillingham. As the two societies include the whole school, the loyal supporters added much to the day by their cheering along the track which had been previously decorated.

As has been the custom before, the students took charge of the regular chapel exercises, and much fun and amusement were furnished by the various "take-offs" of the faculty members. Mr. Tomlinson, the lycum lecturer, spoke in the auditorium at night, and his humorous lecture proved a fitting number with which to close the day's program.

The Premier Tire Investment

Tire purchases are investments to all intelligent buyers. In making investments the first consideration is the dividend.

"Nobby Tread" Tires are the premier tire investment of the world, because—they pay the biggest dividends in mileage, being the lowest final-cost-per-mile tires in the world, because—"punctures 90% less" means greatest security for amount invested, because—they are real anti-skid tires.

True Tire Economy for Everyone

because—they can now be purchased for the price paid in former years for simply ordinary tires, because—few today can afford the extravagance of buying "cheap first-cost" tires, when "Nobby Treads" have absolutely proven their ultimate economy on the basis of lowest final-cost-per-mile.

SCIENCE AND FAR-SCIENCE UP-TO-DATE

This Monkey Is a Real Waiter—He Loves the Tips

IF ONLY Darwin could have lived to know it, his brilliant chapter might have been added to his "Descent of Man." Another and important link has been added, to the chain of confirmation of his theory which binds man and ape in a bond of relationship forged upon tips.

An ape trained to wait on table shows insatiable appreciation of the fact that tips should follow a meal and accepts such with every show of satisfaction and appreciation.

To a traveler sojourning in Batavia, a city of 120,000 inhabitants on the island of Java, we are indebted for the evidence. Augustus W. Dougherty, England, is the man.

Mr. Dougherty sat down at his table in the dining-room the first day of his arrival in Batavia in an equable frame of mind and strictly sober.

Of a sudden he saw a big, manlike ape standing at the dining-room door headed in his direction.

The four-handed mammal matched up to my side, rubbed the traveler's tail, and, gazing with beady eyes straight at me, stood waiting.

"With my heart in my throat and fairly trembling with fear, I cast a side glance at my shaggy attendant. From his upright attitude and the calmness displayed by other guests, it appeared there was no real cause for alarm. Then it dawned upon me that the hairy creature had merely been sent to take my order. Instantly I grasped a pencil and hurriedly marked several articles on the menu card and handed it to the tarrying guest. He chuckled, the printed slip tight in his fingers, turned on his heels, ambled across the spacious apartment and disappeared through a rear door.

"After a short interval I saw the hairy monster making his second approach, this time bearing in his hairy hands a wide tray filled with smoking dishes. Placing the

Safety Devices for Auto Lights

THOSE of you who feel you take your life in your hands every time you cross a street at night because of the dangerous glare of automobile lamps, take heart. A simple plan to eliminate this danger is presented by the invention of a western genius. A simple hood attachment placed on the front of an automobile headlight is so designed that it permits the rays of light to be cast downward, yet shields them from glaring into the eyes of autoists coming in the opposite direction.

And, incidentally, from blinding you.

Fresh Air as Aid to Longevity

How Indoor Living and Lack of Exercise Causes Americans to Die Before Their Allotted Time.

INDOOR living and lack of exercise of Americans are bringing results in the death rate, showing that the chance for long life for middle-aged people in this country has been lessened.

So contends Elmer E. Rittenhouse, president of the Life Extension Institute, who has gathered statistics showing that an astonishing increase in the number of premature deaths from organic diseases has occurred in America for the last thirty years.

"In the last thirty years," he said, "the mortality from such ailments as affect the heart, liver and kidneys has increased 50 per cent in fifteen American cities. These are the only cities for which comparative figures are obtainable for this period. The few states where investigation has been possible show the same trend. People of 35 are nearer death than were their fathers at the same age. While the general average of life has been lengthened and while mortality of infants has been cut down, the span of life in this country is apparently shorter than ever before. The chances for a ripe old age are materially lessened.

This increase in degenerative diseases has cause, and this cause is peculiar to the United States. In searching for these causes the first thing to consider is our ever changed environment, the new mode of living and the general tendency to physical inactivity that now prevail in America. We are a nation in search of ease. We have found it, but we have not adjusted ourselves to it. Our ancestors worked in the fields and ate simple food. Millions of Americans—perhaps 60 per cent or more—whose fathers and grandfathers engaged in out-of-door labor remain indoors the greater part of their lives. They indulge in no muscular activity except in moving around a life on their feet. Labor-saving machinery, cheap transportation, prosperity and other causes have encouraged them to become physically inactive. The telephone has helped. Even the rural free delivery has helped. The farmer who once worked in the furrow now rides the sulky plow.

Mr. Dougherty, was told that these trained apes not only waited on table, but did chamber work and even went marketing.

Written instructions were given to them describing purchases to be made, and they fetched and carried without error a mistake.

They gathered fruit and picked vegetables in the garden. It is now suggested if it wouldn't be possible to import one for home use in our American kitchen.

"Later on he brought in the dessert and then the coffee, and I offered him a tip. The ape grabbed the money with every sign of pleasure and understanding. I learned afterward that the money went to buy him nuts."

"A great mass of human beings accustomed through heredity and centuries of training to an active out-of-door life cannot suddenly suspend the use of their joints and muscles and eat heartily of rich food without paying the penalty. Lack of exercise and overeating are not consistent with a change of life from the fields to the desk or the work bench. Until we eat intelligently and adapt our food to changed conditions there is bound to be a heavy death rate from organic diseases.

"Another reason for our high organic mortality is the strenuous pace that is set for us in the expenditure of our nervous force, and vitality. This has been widely discussed of late, however, and is generally known to the public at large. The remarkable prospect that we have known in the past is one of the elements of the change that has caused this nervous tension and that has contributed to the death rate. It is most gratifying to be assured that millions of our present people have comforts and pleasures that were beyond the reach of their ancestors. But unless we adjust our internal machinery to meet these new conditions we become weak physically.

"People wish to ease for themselves. Great interest has been awakened of late years by the newspapers and by the medical societies in sanitary measures and hygiene. Already many have given up bad habits, have cut down immoderate eating and drinking, have learned to sleep with their windows open, to indulge in the daily tub, and to apply scientific sanitation in various ways. The number of such people is constantly increasing. The number who have adopted the outdoor life has grown. The number who seek the doctor while well in order to avoid becoming seriously ill is becoming larger, but as yet has not grown to such an extent that it has had any noticeable effect upon the mortality rate in middle life and old age. It will do so, however, with proper encouragement and attention. Our innate common sense will ultimately be our salvation."

Every Cloud Has a Silver Lining—War Makes Hens Lay

A CAPTAIN of the London Rifle Brigade, writing home from the trenches in France, says that exploding shells always make the hens lay.

"Whether it's the shock or what, I cannot say, and as soon as the fusillade is over you see men dashing about after a stray chicken in hope that she will drop an egg," he writes.

Sounds as though the captain in question were trying to break into the columns of a comic journal, doesn't it?

But John D. Newman, assistant state food commissioner of Illinois, says there may be more truth than fiction in the writing of the British fighting man. Mr. Newman's experience in poultry raising qualifies him to speak as an authority.

"The hen, as most farmers know, is for the greater part a creature of habit," said the Illinois official. "She is wont to go to roost at a certain hour, and begin to stir as soon as daylight comes.

"This is just a theory, of course, but I would not be surprised if it were true.

Resulting that at this time of the year the thins most needful to make chickens lay are green stuff and the bugs and beetles that chickens consume, many farmers strive to find something that takes their place. Many of them grow oats in trays alongside their furnaces, and within a week they have out high enough so that they can take out the oats but the earth itself, torn it apart and feed it all to the chickens.

For the substitute for bugs and beetles, beef scraps are used. In order that their Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Leghorns, Light Brahmas and Cochins may produce despite their molting period.

The average hen restricts her output to about 120 eggs a year, though the Oregon agricultural experiment station has a prize hen with a record of 303 eggs a year. Now, if an Oregon hen can lay 180 eggs more than her competitors by living according to certain rules and schedules, might it not be a good plan for chicken raisers to experiment seriously with what seems in itself a joke—that "exploding shells always make the hens lay."

THIS year's crop of "fool legislation" is a bumper.

For instance, A bill is before the New York legislature which would prevent anyone from becoming a ball "dodger"—that is, permitting people to throw balls at one's head, providing the other man is willing to pay $5 cents for three shots. Foolish question No. 6,396,273: Would the adoption of the bill please Coney Island?

Any Kansas woman over 45 years old who would wear earrings or treat her face with cosmetics "for the purpose of creating a false impression" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, be subject to a fine, if a bill before the legislature is passed. Face powder, perfume, false hair and bleaching materials for the hair are among the articles enumerated in the list the women are forbidden to use.

The Alabama goes dry on June 30. Yet a bill becomes law then preventing any person from receiving more than one quart of liquor a month from outside the state. Each South Carolinian is permitted to receive just one shipment of "corn licker" per month, such shipment "not to exceed one gallon."

Wisconsin has a bill which says that "no educational institution of any kind which is supported in whole or in part by public money is to employ a teacher who smokes cigarettes," nor, the bill adds, "shall any institution grant a diploma or certificate of education to anyone who smokes cigarettes."

Farmers Corner Silver Dollars

THE American farmer has cornered the market for silver dollars. Now to let Irving Shuman, chief of the Chicago treasury, tell you why:

"The American title of the soil usually wears jeans with pockets in the front—instead of the side. He likes to put his hands in his pockets when carrying on a conversation, and he likes to jingle a few silver dollars while doing so. It is a sign of prosperity. Bring to mind any farmer you might know and you will say that I am right.

"It is a habit with him, much the same as twiddling a watch chain or fob is a habit with the city-bred man. Were you to give the farmer a dollar bill in making change, he would exchange it at the first opportunity.

"The city man—through force of habit, I suppose—dislikes to accept a silver dollar when he can get a bill. His idea of prosperity is not to run several heavy coins together with a resultant 'clink, click,' but to carry a bill fold with greenbacks lying in it, one on top of the other.

"Funny, isn't it, what environment will do?"

As proof of Mr. Shuman's statement Carl Thiers, paying teller of the Merchants' National Bank of St. Paul, says that such a demand for paper money, especially dollar bills, has grown up in St. Paul that silver coin accumulates until it has to be sent to the mint treasury in Chicago.

A storm of protest arose following the declarations of the chemist. Dealers in precious stones and jewelers of Paris and New York especially were indignant.

"The chemist who makes these charges is a prominent man in his line," said a New York jeweler, "but he offers no evidence to back up his claims about the supposed frauds in the trade in India rubies. There may have been an occasional fraud, but they are not frequent.

"It is entirely wrong to say that experts cannot detect the finest of artificial stones, including rubies, from natural products. The experienced lapidary or jeweler can tell them from the other quite readily."

It is a real twentieth century nut cracker.

Which is about all anyone can ask of a nut cracker, is it not? The man who has earned the respect of the nut-cracking community is a Philadelphia. In order to facilitate the cracking of nuts he has provided his device with a bent handle that serves to rest the cracker on the table so as to procure greater pressure. Greater efficiency, too, is obtained by the manner in which the ridges of the jaw are designed.

It has often been your misfortune (if you have ever cracked nuts) to smash the nut into bits, and, perhaps, in so doing to pinch your fingers to boot, as the little boy would say. A set screw which limits the distance to which the jaws may close prevents such things occurring in the invention of the Pennsylvania man.

NEW HANDS for OLD

Secrets of Hand and Arm Massage, As Given in Paris Beauty Shop, Are Here Divulged

By MME. QUI VIVE.

FEAR of old age, with its wrinkles and other unlovely consequences of youth's departure, is the big imp that trails at the heels of Beauty, spurring her to fresh endeavor. Every woman knows that eventually the years will descend upon her head, but just how leaving they strike the blow depends upon her efforts to resist them. It's not how you look today, O charmer, but how you are going to look ten or twenty years from now. With that thought in mind you can scarcely fail to do your best.

Fighting Father Time.

After the age of 40 the soft tissues under the skin dissolve more rapidly than nature can renew them. Sometimes this process begins earlier; it depends upon the woman's constitution and the good care she has given herself. The first fearful sign is a tiny fold in front of the lobe of the ear. After that the throat is likely to crinkle. Then the hands and arms begin to look wan and worn. Oh! that we might always stay young!

The average time-fighter seldom considers the beauty of her arms. She will care for her hair, massage her complexion, manicure her shell-pink finger-nails, and hunger herself to a state of starvation for the sake of her figure. Her arms are forgotten, which is a pity indeed, since these good members serve her well and are deserving of the best consideration. They respond more quickly to attention than any other part of the body. The following directions for hand and arm massage are an exploitation of the exact process given in the most up-to-date beauty shops of Paris. The treatment is wonderfully effective and will positively prevent scrawiness and ugliness, coarse texture of skin and the heavy surface of epidermis that often forms on the elbows.

Brew of Magic Lotion.

The first need is a cold cream. This formula is unexcelled:
Spermaceti, two ounces.
White wax, two ounces.
Sweet almond oil, ten ounces.
Melt in a porcelain vessel which has been placed in a hot water bath. When the ingredients are thoroughly incorporated remove from the fire, adding:

Stronger rose water, three ounces.
Powdered borax, forty grains.
Fluff to a foam with an egg beater, pouring into small jars just before the mixture is solid.

Feeding the Skin.

Bathe the hands and arms in warm water and with pure white unscented soap, drying thoroughly and frictioning with a Turkish towel. Anoint with the cream, massaging briskly and firmly into the skin. Stroke up and down the arms and then with the fingers bracketed about the arm go round and round from wrist to elbow. Massage the elbow itself with a circular movement of the finger tips.

Beginning with the thumb, treat each digit separately, taking great care to rub the cream well into every joint and knuckle. Smooth upward and downward, also round and round. Give particular attention to the cuticle about the finger-nails. Finish up by rubbing the palms of the hands together. This massage treatment should be continued for ten or fifteen minutes. It is no trick at all, and the special, important purpose is to force the skin to behave as much as possible, of the emollient. At the finish of the frictioning the flesh should be pink and glowing, and the arms warm. The heavier and firmer the treatment the more effective the results will be.

When the cream is pretty well absorbed sprinkle the hands and arms with powdered almond meal. Pat it on the flesh, so that all the surface is covered. Have some member of your family wring large Turkish towel out of very hot water and cover hands and arms closely, so no air can penetrate. As the towels cool apply fresh ones, steaming hot; the hotter, the better. The effect of the combination of cream and meal will be really wonderful, imparting to the surface of the skin a soft, velvety "feel" that is positively luxurious. The compresses should be continued for ten minutes.

Beware Soap and Water.

Remove the meal and cream with absorbent cotton which has been dipped in warm water to which a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin has been added. Never remove an emollient with soap and water, else your good work will be lost.

Dry the hands and arms with a bit of old, soft linen, sprinkle with talcum powder and give a final dry massage for three or four minutes. A touch of violet water in the palms of the hand and your treatment is complete.

The Finishing Touches.

Since the massage softens the cuticle about the nail, a manicure should follow. The nails are then in perfect condition for attention. If you are in the habit of taking care of your nails yourself, file them before the treatment; otherwise they will be too soft for filing. Treat the cuticle afterward, loosening it with an orange wood stick which has been dipped first in peroxide of hydrogen and then in powdered pumice stone. Snip of the raggedy shreds with the pointed scissors, cleanse the nails with the orange stick, polish with your little nail polisher of chance, and the deed is "done." Your hands and arms will be like velvet, free of all roughness and soft to the touch of other hands. One hand-and-arm massage a week will keep those members young. Women who are partial invalids will find it a happy way of spending their time. Young girls should be made to follow these instructions. It will mean a great deal to them when they are older. It's the woman who gets an early start in the right kind of polychrome habits who stays young the longest.

If the arms are sallow or brown, apply this bleaching cream the night before the treatment:

Lanolin, two and one-half ounces.
Almond oil, two and one-half ounces.
Sulphur precipitate, two and one-half ounces.

Oxide of zinc, one and one-fourth ounces.

Violet extract, two drams.

Rub the oil gradually into the sulphur and zinc until a paste is formed, then add the lanolin and perfume.

Mme. Qui Vive's Answers to Beauty Queries

THEODORA—There are individuals blessed with such quick, comprehensive and well-ordered minds that they can do almost any task, and do it well. Ordinarily the individual has one talent, possibly two. If you feel that you are gifted, let all your reading and educational efforts point toward the fulfillment of the one ambition. "Be what nature intended you for, and you will succeed; be anything else and you will be ten thousand times worse than nothing," wrote Sydney Smith. We are all fastened with the chains of circumstances and drag our anchors here and there. Every one who does much in the world must hurdle the difficulties and not expect that success is a casual journey down pleasant avenues.

MISSEY—Bushy eyebrows need discipline. When there are wildish hairs that won't stay put, clip them slightly. Afterward apply brilliantine, putting it on with an eyebrow brush. Brown mascara can be used as a darkening agent; no permanent dye is desirable for brows and lashes. After a shampoo have the scalp massaged briskly and alcohol applied to the neck there will then be no danger of taking cold. It is impossible to cure dandruff unless the hair is shampooed frequently. Nothing will dissolve dandruff; it must first be softened with an oily application and then removed by vigorous shampooing.

BETTY—The writer is not at liberty to give an opinion of proprietary articles. Many bleaches contain corrosive sublimate, which is likely to cause irritation if the skin is sensitive. You can remove tan and freckles by applying this ointment once a day: Spermaceti, 120 grains; white wax, 120 grains; oil of sweet almonds, four drams; salicylic acid, sixteen grains; white precipitate, four grains. It is easier to prevent freckles than to cure them. Always use cold cream on the face before going out into the wind and sun and directly after coming in. Use powder freely; it is a protection against the elements.

HELEN M. S.—The tonic you mention is a figure developer. If you would gain flesh generally, you can do so by exercising sufficiently in the open air to create a good appetite and then eat freely of flesh-producing foods, such as eggs, cereals, sweets, vegetables, meats, poultry, etc. Sleep in a well-ventilated room. No emollient applied to the upper and lower limbs will cause them to fatten. Any healthy woman who has the time to exercise out of doors and to rest the moment she is fatigued can gain weight. Water is fattening. Drink eight glasses each day. Sleep at least nine hours each night. Eat often but not in excess. If the digestion has too much work to do the system is depleted rather than strengthened.

The Arms Are Dried Thoroughly With a Turkish Towel and Then the Cream Is Massaged Firmly Into the Skin.

Seeking Happiness On the Farm

BY DOROTHY DOLAN.

I WANT to make a honest confession not in a spirit of egotism, but because I wish other women to benefit by my folly," said a woman, at a sewing circle the other day. "You see, when I was first married I did my own housework and enjoyed it immensely. I continued to do much of it after the first babies came. When my husband became prosperous I left the housework to maids while I devoted myself to receptions, parties and plenty of good food.

"Before long I felt myself getting crabbed and cross because I was no more interested in social things than I was in housework. It took me longer to realize that I was getting ungraciously and stuff. The situation was going from bad to worse, when—right about face! It came as quick as a flash out of a clear sky.

"One day an older sister came to see me and said, 'Well, sis, you are getting too big and blue for any life. You are leading too easy a life. See what a girl's life I have. This is because I am busy all the time. It is either housework or the children. There is no time to be idle, who is the greatest lady of the lot!'

"The next morning we were up bright and early, making the breakfast. The menu included coffee, toast, cold eggs, corn muffins and toast. Every bit of it was delicious. When sister suggested that I should eat everything I hated. I was unwilling to add another quarter of a pound to my weight, already too heavy.

"Not long, however, she said, 'I grant that all these foods are fat producers. If you will not work them off. Come, begin the day with splendid, energetic work, and you can stay as you like.'

"After a wonderful glimpse of the morning paper, to be read more thoroughly later in the morning, we began our work. My sister put a broom, not a vacuum cleaner, into my hands. She made me sweep all the best corners of the house. I commenced with the corners and worked my way into the centers and under the bed. I had not perceived so much as midsummer as I did with the bit of healthy exercise.

"While I was doing this work, my sister was making the beds and cleaning the floors. I noticed that my friends admire me more now than they did when I frittered away time and money."

"This girl's opinion is certainly just and true. A young woman's occupation and her life have little effect on her social position. There was a time that a girl coming from a good family could not work for her living without antagonizing her family and being snubbed by many of her friends. If you wish to be considered a gentleman in business dress, you should be able to keep the good manners you were taught when a child. Whether you are genuine or a counterfeit is a mere affair of gentility or a real gentleman—everybody who meets you can tell.

"It is foolish for you to put on fine manners with your superiors and for occasion. Such polish does not wear well. It is too easily rubbed off. Your fine manners brought out for occasions will have little weight if you are habitually coarse and rude. Gentleness is the chief charm of personality in business, as elsewhere. There is no quality of character which carries so much weight and wins so much respect as sincerity.

"Remember, the very tone of voice in which you say 'Good morning,' the very manner in which you exchange thoughts with your associates mark your breeding. It does not take a keen reader of character to tell whether you are genuinely sincere. Women often guess in business no less than they do socially, because they want their associates to have a good opinion of them. If this is allowed to grow there is soon not a shred of genuineness left in this type of woman. This deep creeps into the manner and as into the conversation and dress. There is a false tone to this insincerity.

"Fudge—nonsense," exploded the eldest of the three young women. "Working for a living does not make you or mar you for a great woman. That rests with your character and not with your work. I have been a court reporter these last seven years. I find that I have many more chances to make what are commonly called 'good matches' now than when I was in society.

"When a man admires me now, I feel that it is for my true worth and not because of some social advantage. It was only last week a wealthy bachelor said he thinks well of me because I had enough nerve to ing up the down stairs. It was nearly noon before we had finished and I was too tired to think of getting lunch. While I sat down and rested, sister delved into boxes and pantry and found enough leftovers to make a delicious luncheon. This was supplemented by one hot dish which she prepared in the dining dish.

"I suggested that we stay at home and rest until dinner time. Sister reminded me of our engagement at the sewing circle. Besides sewing for two hours and having plenty of friendly conversation, we had a five-mile walk.

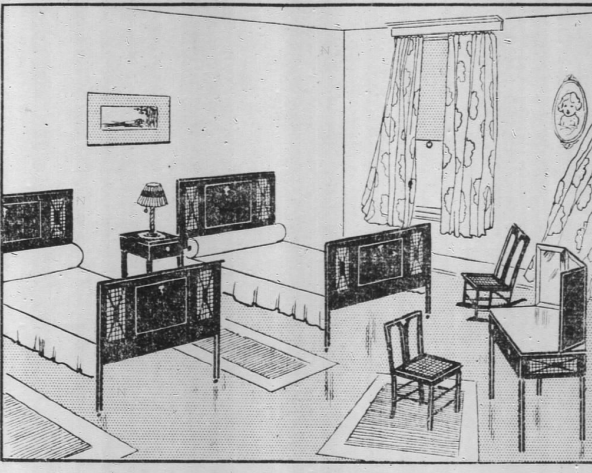

"I forgot to say that before we started we put most of our dinner in the fireless cooker, so it was waiting for us almost finished when we returned. The hour before dinner was used making a delicious fruit salad and a chocolate pudding. I was so interested in helping her make the salad and the dessert that I exercised my powers of concentration more than I had in weeks.

"The best part of it all was when my husband and children were one to the opinion that the dinner was delicious. I was given the credit for having prepared the meal. Sister visited with us some four weeks and during that time I had more fun than I had had in a year. We made every minute count. We did the house work, prepared the meals and gradually undertook the washing and ironing of the fine pieces.

"By the time my sister was ready to leave, I was an experienced housekeeper. There was no kind of work that I did not enjoy and could not do readily. The compensation of it all was I had lost fifteen pounds weight without depriving myself of the many good things I liked to eat. I was on the way of losing another fifteen pounds. The next figure and the contented smile were only a part of my compensation. It was so strong and enthusiastic that I was ever ready to do my part, whether it was housework or looking after the children.

"I had learned the all important lesson that there is nothing so good for the health, the nerves and the spirits as plenty of housework. I believe that the best way to enjoy a meal is to work for it. The easiest way to enjoy all pleasures is to earn them. Activity in the home and outside is the keynote of the twentieth century woman."

THIS sleeping-room is done in a French combination of soft pink and creamy yellow, a regular peach blow. The walls are a silk fiber paper in creamy yellow and the hangings are a chintz with cream background and tiny sprigs of pink and yellow, with bits of delicate green foliage. All the furniture is in cream enamel, with insets of natural cane, while the lighting fixtures are of dull gold carved wood, with shades made from the chintz.

Home Decoration and Furnishing

BY MADAME MAISON.

ARRANGING a well-ordered bedroom is often a difficult problem, owing to the fact that the average architect, in considering the appearance of the finished house, pays too much attention to the outward view than to the facility with which furniture is to be placed on the inside. I observed a young matron say recently that she had almost fainted and died before she succeeded in getting the windows placed in her sleeping-room as she wished, and then only after the architect in despair told her that her wishes were not architectural. Be that as it may, she now has cross ventilation in every bedroom, with a space for the placing of a double bed or "cots" and room to walk around them.

There should be a place for the dressing table, with a good outside light, and then there should be not the right place for the built-in wardrobe closet, with its compartments for hats and all articles of feminine attire. This is a good time to tell you of a most charming apartment belonging to a young woman. I have just space to describe the sleeping-room, which was done in a French combination of soft pink and creamy yellow, a regular peach blow. The walls were a silk fiber paper in creamy yellow and the hangings were a chintz with cream background and tiny sprigs of pink and yellow, with bits of delicate green foliage. All the furniture was in cream enamel, with insets of natural cane, while the lighting fixtures were of dull gold carved wood, with shades made from the chintz. A chaise longue had finger rails and a slumber throne of pink on one side and pale yellow on the other. The wall articles were of glass, with pinkish pebble enamel tone. There were a few French prints on the wall, many framed photographs of friends and reproductions of old masters.

A new feature was a set of white enameled lock shelves that stood in a corner of the room and were filled with the favorite books of the young woman who I am here to state keeps up with all the questions of the day in spite of the fact that she must do the society act much more than she really cares to, as she is only a daughter. As the walls are only eight feet high, there is no border to the paper, the top being finished with a narrow cream enameled picture molding.

Take the same amount of rice until it is well boiled. Let the soup cook until it is very clear and strain off all the grease. Put in the rice and serve with a teaspoonful of whipped cream and a dash of paprika.

Pineapple Salad—Fried and Slice a fresh pineapple. Serve three or four slices on each plate with some crisp lettuce leaves. Arrange the slices like the points of a star and put a small ball of cream cheese in the center. Decorate the edge of the pineapple with strips of pimento. Serve with French dressing, which has been flavored with a little orange juice.

Lobster in the Shell—Boil one or more live lobsters according to their size. Cut the meat in small pieces. Season with salt, pepper and a little melted butter. Place in hot oven until well heated. Put the lobster back in the shell or serve in ramekins. Serve with cucumber sauce.

Orange Ice—Make a pint of orange juice. Flavor with one cupful of sugar and a bit of gelatin dissolved in water. Heat to the boiling point and then beat until cold. Freeze and let stand one hour before serving.

Novelties in Home Entertainment

BY DAME CURTSEY.

SOME ONE has said that "the pomps and vanities" of this wicked world receive a terrible drubbing during Lent, but with the return of Easter day the recovery is quick and certain. This is very true if I may judge by the numerous letters that have flooded this office from even most remote towns asking for all sorts of parties, for new ways to announce engagements, etc., thus plainly showing that Cupid has not been idle during these last forty days.

Instead of the popularity of showers being on the wane it is on the increase, and Easter brides are having delightful surprises planned for them by their admiring friends, who should all belong to the class called "nearest and dearest." For showers are such intimate affairs that mere acquaintances should not be asked; rather should these parties be given by members of the family, of either bride or bridegroom.

I want to tell you about a novel handkerchief shower. There were twenty guests and each was asked to send the number to the hostess the day before. She made charming rows of pink tissue paper, concealing the handkerchief in the center. All these rows had the cards of donors attached by a bit of narrow white and pink gauze ribbon and were made into a flower's bouquet, which was placed in a florist's box and delivered by a special messenger after all the guests had arrived. She disliked to tear open the roses, but that was what the handkerchief shower was all about. The result was a radiant young maiden when the twenty dainty additions to her trousseau were revealed.

Ice cream was served in shape of roses and cakes ornamented with candy cones. I forgot to say the wedding flower is to be white roses for the bride and pink roses for the bridesmaids.

A Bonnet Party.

An ingenious hostess, ever on the alert to provide something new for the entertainment of her guests, has had ten or twenty of her friends spend the Monday before Easter with her.

VIVIAN'S Heart to Heart Chat
DEAR VIVIAN: I have been married for a year and I am much in love with my husband. We are splendid pals, and still there is one thing that has crept into my life to make me very unhappy. It is not serious, but still it worries me. My husband has a chum who comes to our house frequently.

We are both fond of dining and singing. While we amuse ourselves in this fashion my husband plays cards or reads. I find myself interested in late in the man's personality as well as in his music. He has a charming manner and he is very handsome. Shall I tell my husband, as I do not want to deceive him?

Worried—I do not think that you are as much infatuated with your husband's friend as you think. You are fond of the man because he is entertaining and good looking. You are not right to worry your husband concerning household difficulties. Both of you should always want to share each other's honest thoughts and perplexities, especially if it is vital to your happiness.

You have won your husband's love and respect by fair, honest means; certainly you want to hold it by playing fair and above board. You have no right to worry your husband concerning household difficulties. Both of you should always want to share each other's honest thoughts and perplexities, especially if it is vital to your happiness.

DEAR VIVIAN: I am acquainted with a painter who, though still young, has made quite a reputation for himself. He loves me and wants me to accept that love. He says that I shall always be his best inspiration. He admires my character no less than my looks. I have my doubts that I shall ever inspire him to become a great artist. Do you?

Thoughtful—I do not see why you should not become an inspiration to your artist friend. Many a genius has confessed that some good and handsome woman has inspired him to hours being from 2 until 5. She has provided many rolls of crepe and French tissue paper of all shades, also many of stiff white paper for making the last frames. Each guest is to create an Easter hat, and there will be a vote taken for the best and prettiest conception.

Why Colored Eggs at Easter?
A Swiss story accounts in this way for our colored eggs at Easter. During the crusades a lady living in a castle along the line of march received some chickens as a present from a man who was returning from the East. Chickens were a great novelty, and highly prized by her new owners. While the men in her household were at the crusades she was compelled to hand of fowls to leave her home and take refuge in the Black Forest, where the peasants protected her. She managed to take the chickens with her, and it was her desire to make gifts of eggs to her neighbor neighbors, especially to the children, whom she loved and instructed.

It was her custom to make the presents at the Easter season, and as she grew poorer and poorer all she had left was the eggs supplied by the faithful fowls. At a long how to make the eggs acceptable as gifts, she thought of coloring them and hiding them among the leaves in the forest. She sent the children to hunt them, and they were excited as to how they came now so far from the barnyard. They finally concluded that the eggs must have laid them, and so the children in that locality believe to this day, as well as their little German cousins across the border.

Affair for an Easter Bride.
A young woman who has chosen to be an Easter bride is to have a novel affair given her. The articles presented are all to be small, and are concealed in an Easter favor. This would include turner collars, cuffs, handkerchiefs, silk stockings, bits of jewelry, dollies, etc. The place favors are to be adorable Easter hats and a big box covered with crepe, a small paper of suitable design is to be provided to put the gifts in for the bride to take home. This is to be a luncheon and the gifts will be presented by the maid carrying them on a tray after the dessert course. The centerpiece is to be Easter lilies.

his best achievements. Nobody was more willing to admit this than the great scholar and writer Chateaubriand, who in his "Memoirs d'Outre-Tombe," makes a bold confession that he was not a great man, but that he meant more in his career than any small amount of genius he may have had.

It took years for the English poet Rossetti to prove to the woman who afterward became his wife that he needed her love to do his best work. When she argued against him, saying that she had real doubts if she could make him happy, he tried to show her that the question of his happiness was not the real issue. He knew that he loved her and that this love would inspire him to his best poems, and so he did.

The poet Browning also felt that he and the love of Elizabeth Barrett were the work he had to do. When she tried to argue that she was too frail to become the wife of any man he answered, "If it can be nothing more you must at least be my wife in name."

DEAR VIVIAN: My husband and I were the best of comrades the first year we were married, but for some unknown reason we are drifting apart. When I want to go to a dance he wants to play cards. If I suggest that we go to the theater he will have none of it. He is tired and wants to stay home and read. What would you advise, as I want to please him?

AN UNHAPPY WIFE.
My Dear Child—The easiest way to please any man is to look your best and be your best. By your best I mean you must have yourself well. Always be amiable, but let it be the outgrowth of strength, not of a negative character. Make your share of the right concessions and make them first. Then ask for your rights, but be sure to ask for them in a sweet, tactful way.

MAYOR'S "BLUSTER" DAPPED BY KELLEY

Mayor Has Adopted "Tortuous and Underground Policy," He Says—"Pants for Trouble," He Claims.

Alderman C. H. Kelley, of the second ward, has issued another "card to the public" in which he takes issue with Mayor Woodruff on the Pryor street paving proposition and declares he and his associates of the second ward are not to be frightened by the "arrogant bluster" of the mayor.

The alderman claims that the mayor did not object to his having the Pryor street paving taken up, but objected when he ordered the new pavement laid.

He still contends that the mayor adopted a "tortuous and underground policy" in the matter, and he says the official records will substantiate everything the second ward delegation in the general council has claimed.

Alderman Kelley's Statement.

His statement follows: "The Mayor's statement in the public press, after the meeting of the street committee, is a very evident mental disparagement which causes him to deny the allegations of the second ward delegation. This is his usual style, and it is his usual policy to deny the facts of the case and then when we are brought back to the matter he will have himself in the wrong and a good many people in Atlanta will believe him, as he really is, than most of us.

He said that the Mayor's statement in the case which stands out like a sore thumb. In everything which the Mayor has done, he has been guided by the official record, or points of reputation, whereas, the Mayor has nothing but his own word backed by his blustering.

He said that the Mayor's statement is a very much needed piece of evidence of bad faith, or underground action, on the part of the Mayor. He said that he will give you the naked facts and you can judge for yourselves. He said that he will tell the Pryor street people, being himself in favor of the street paving, that the Mayor's statement is a very much needed piece of evidence of bad faith, or underground action, on the part of the Mayor.

Mayor Did Not Intervene.

When I, as chairman of the street committee, had the Mayor's statement read, he did not intervene. When I had the Mayor's statement read, he did not intervene. When I had the Mayor's statement read, he did not intervene.

Underground Policy.

If the brief report of the plan does not show a tortuous and underground policy, I am certain at a low rate to be certain that it is a tortuous and underground policy. I am certain at a low rate to be certain that it is a tortuous and underground policy.

JONES AND REAGAN WILL SPEAK TODAY TO CIGARMAKERS

The cigarmakers' union, which has announced its own meeting to be held Sunday in the Mill theater, 38 West Peachtree street, has also made arrangements to hold another open meeting April 11, at the same time.

They announce, is deemed advisable on account of the unprecedented success of the meeting which has been announced in the open meetings of the several unions participating in the Labor Forward Movement of Atlanta.

The program of Sunday will be largely taken up with moving pictures which have been expressly selected for the occasion by the committee.

Mr. Jones, manager of the Mill theater, has given the use of the hall to the cigarmakers' union, and has done everything in his power to facilitate the success of the meetings.

The union will be shown from 7 o'clock in the afternoon until 10. The music will be furnished by an orchestra. No admission will be charged, but a free will offering will be taken at the door for the purposes of charity.

EX-GOVERNOR GLENN HERE NEXT SUNDAY FOR TWO SPEECHES

Ex-Governor R. B. Glenn, of North Carolina, will speak twice in Atlanta next Sunday. At 2 o'clock he will make a talk at the Baptist Tabernacle on Lackey street on the subject, "The Problem of Today for the Citizens of Whose Duty It is to Meet Them."

At 7 o'clock he will appear at the Grand opera house, speaking on the subject, "Following the Victor for the Sale of the Men and the Young Men."

This latter address is delivered in the city of Atlanta, and is the subject of one of the most important papers for the use of the opera house that night.

Why Jacobs' Pharmacy Stays on Top

Self-Interest! This Tells the Whole Story And 11 Big Drug Stores Is the Result

In the beginning we realized that to appeal to the Self-Interest of our customers spelled success for us. "It will pay you" we have always said. We cut prices. We sold exactly the same goods as others, but at lower prices. Competitors complained, then either quit or imitated us.

At first the lure of prices alone attracted customers. They soon discovered that we backed up our low prices with a positive and reliable guarantee—with high quality and uniformly prompt and courteous service. Our policy has never changed except that it has been continuously improved.

Year after year we have grown. Today we are the largest Drug House in the entire south. And we are still growing—the end is not yet. Our policy is irresistible—our methods meet with popular approval. Lower prices, better goods and prompt service—these are clearing the road ahead for us.

Here Are Some "Self-Interest" Prices That Cannot Be Equalled

Marriage by Proxy Revival of an Ancient Custom

Was proxy wedded with a bootless calf at eight years old.

PAST are the days when children were married, adults standing for them and taking the vows that they little understood, but marriage by proxy still takes place under certain conditions. Recently the French Minister of Justice, with the approval of the Minister of War, approved the bill which allows soldiers who are unable to leave the front to marry by proxy. Thus a girl who has seen her lover go forth to fight for his country marry the girl to whom he was engaged. It was therefore arranged that they should be married by proxy in the home of the bride in Modena, Italy. The bridegroom, Luciano Solmi, took out a special license and sent it by mail to Modena and the bride's brother, Marco Stenami, took his place at the ceremony which was regularly performed. Then, escorted by her brother, the bride arrived in New York, where she was met by her husband and another ceremony was performed by a priest. These were persons of social position which made it necessary for them to take a little different course from that of the ordinary peasant lovers who join each other when they can and are married when the one who is left behind is able to go to the other.

The Japanese marry frequently by proxy, photographs figuring largely in the choice of husband or wife and the brief courtship leading up to it. A Japanese in the country decides to remain, at least for years, and wants a wife. A photograph is sent to him by the parents of a likely bride, and if he is impressed with her appearance he requests that some one act in his place, and the marriage takes place in his own country. Frequently, too, the prospective bridegroom must send his picture, not that the bride may see whether she likes him or not, but that her parents may decide if he is to be contracted, as, "I make such a one my proxy to contract matrimony or espousals for me, or in my name, with A. B."

The form of contracting matrimony by a proxy is like this: "I do contract matrimony with thee in the name of such a man, whose proxy I am, and the woman replies, 'I do take him to be my husband by thee, being his proxy proctor.'"

"And it is necessary that the party who did constitute the proctor do persons and continue in the same mind until the contract is finished, for if he repeat or revoke his proctor, which he may do lawfully, though he had covenanted and even sworn not to revoke, the contract is void, and that notwithstanding the proctor be ignorant of the revocation."

"But the party constituted is presumed to remain in the same mind until he revokes unless the woman do not express her consent thereto until a long time after; there the man's consent is not presumed to endure if he affirm the contrary."

An interesting example of the revocation of the proctor and its consequences is seen in the case of the daughter of the Duke of Milan. The Duke had two daughters, famous for their beauty and accomplishments, Agnesa and Katherine.

The King of Cyprus despatched an ambassador to contract marriage with Agnesa, supposing her to be the younger. After his ambassador had set sail the King learned that she was the older and revoked the proxy mandate, but the ambassador, ignorant of this transaction, continued on his voyage and contracted matrimony, according to his instructions, with Agnesa.

"The King was infinitely concerned with this mistake, but did not consider it becoming to the majesty of a prince to revoke from his word and honor and consented to ratify the contract his ambassador had made."

When Agnesa heard that he was not the King's choice the families of her kind were disordered; she turned into sorrow and love into hate. She tried to drown her grief in a sea of broken china and other rubbish, such as it is customary to throw after the newly wedded in that country."

One of the most interesting of the royal marriages by proxy was that of Anne of Denmark, who became the wife of James VI, her proxy husband being Earl Marischal. After the ceremony they embarked for Scotland, but a tempest drove them on the coast of Norway, where they remained for months. For three days the bride's ship was lost sight of and was in a very perilous position when found by the ambassador's ship.

James, announcing that he was determined to have at least one real romance in his life, issued a proclamation and sailed from Leth for the shores of Norway, taking with him a clergyman, by whom he and the shipwrecked princess were married.

They were prevented from sailing for she will be waiting for her husband to come from the wars. Or, if he should have to sacrifice his life for his country, she will be a soldier's widow, and at least will have what nature has in the person granted to that class.

More than the financial assistance, which is small, is the satisfaction that both the girl and her soldier lover will get from the knowledge that whatever may happen in the hazards of war they belong to each other.

In civil life marriage by proxy has fallen into disrepute, but it is occasionally resorted to in unusual circumstances. Only a month ago there was a peculiarly interesting wedding of this kind with crossed lines reaching more than half way around the world.

An American girl wanted to marry a Hollander. She was in Denver, Colo., and he was in Samarang, Java, where he was doing some engineering work. He could not come to America to marry her and she did not want to go to Java until she was married. They therefore arranged for two weddings to be celebrated simultaneously in the widely separated places. Harvey V. Deuel, of Brooklyn, acted as proxy for the absent bridegroom and there were best men and bridesmaids and the decorations proper to a real wedding at the Denver ceremony. Out in Java a girl whom the bride had never seen took her place. Soon after the ceremony which made Eugenia Campbell Mrs. John P. Scholten the bride started for San Francisco and from there took passage for Java, taking her honeymoon alone. A special dispensation had been obtained from Queen Wilhelmina so that she would not be subject to immigration laws of Holland which prevail in Java, its province.

A few years ago there was a well-to-do Italian chemist who was engaged in such important laboratory work in this country that the factory by which he was employed would not grant him leave of absence for the length of time required for him to go to Italy and whether they want him for a son-in-law. The marriage by proxy was a recognized institution of medieval times and many of the members of royal and even noble houses continued it until much later times. In "A Critical Essay Concerning Marriage," written by "A Gentleman" in 1724, we read in regard to the contracting of marriage between absent parties: "There be two ways—by mediation of their proctors, by messengers or by letters. And it is said to be necessary in these cases that the parties have some knowledge of each other, at least by fame or report; it being impossible to yield our assent to contracting marriages with those to whom we are entirely strangers. And surely he runs a great hazard who loves or makes over his person upon common fame or even upon the judgment of dearest friends."

"When espousals or matrimony are to be contracted by a proctor it is necessary that in the proxy (or letter of attorney) be specified expressly a certain person with whom the spousal or matrimony her hair, stripped herself of her wedding robe, pulled off the nuptial ring and threw them into the fire, swearing and protesting with most horrid execrations that she would never take the King of Cyprus for her husband, but would wed another."

"Her father consulted famous lawyers, who decided that both the lady and the King were at liberty, because he had revoked his proctor."

"In some proxy marriages where it was not convenient for the prince or noble to leave his country and the bride had to be fetched from a distance to make the marriage a sure event the ambassador married her by proxy with every ceremonial of the Church. In some cases they slept in the state bed, with a sword between, in view of the public. Subsequently there was a ceremony with the rightful bridegroom. Even the local customs were adhered to in the proxy marriage, as in the case of Lord Malmsbury, who acted as proxy for the Duke of York in 1792. Outside the premises were found, the morning after the wedding Scotland by the weather, which continued so threatening that they dared not leave for the north, but betook themselves to Denmark, the home of the bride, where they remained for several months, coming back in the spring. Anne was permitted to be crowned as Queen, but not to make her triumphal entry into Edinburgh because of its being the Lord's Day. She made up for the postponement, however, by having the gayest kind of festival, with shows and tournaments and allegorical pageantry."

The son of this royal couple, Charles I, who succeeded his father on the throne of England, also made a marriage by proxy. As usual, politics played a large part, and while some of the young King's advisers were strong for a Spanish marriage, others advocated a French alliance. Buckingham, the King's favorite, threw his influence on this side and a marriage was arranged between the Stuart monarch and Henrietta Maria, sister of the French

King. The King did not go to France for his bride, that was not a part of the political programme, but he appointed the Duke of Chevreuse to act as his proxy, and while the marriage was being celebrated in Paris festivities were being across the Channel in honor of the occasion. Another duke was appointed to escort the bride to England, where she was met by her husband and another marriage ceremony was performed.

The Queen of Charles I. was destined to share in his misfortunes, and in spite of the honors she never became thoroughly popular with the English. It might be too much to say that stirring married life with a substitute husband was an unhappy omen in the old days, but certainly many of the marriages of this kind were full of rue and discord.

KING. The King did not go to France for his bride, that was not a part of the political programme, but he appointed the Duke of Chevreuse to act as his proxy, and while the marriage was being celebrated in Paris festivities were being across the Channel in honor of the occasion.

Another duke was appointed to escort the bride to England, where she was met by her husband and another marriage ceremony was performed.

The Queen of Charles I. was destined to share in his misfortunes, and in spite of the honors she never became thoroughly popular with the English. It might be too much to say that stirring married life with a substitute husband was an unhappy omen in the old days, but certainly many of the marriages of this kind were full of rue and discord.

There was Margaret of Anjou, who was married in the Church of St. Martin to Henry VI. of England, William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, acting as proxy. Many difficulties delayed the marriage, and after it had been accomplished her progress to England was slow and attended by untoward circumstances, although all the demonstrations due to royalty were showered upon her.

Although she was good looking and clever she was obstinate and domineering and never popular. She was the unflinching supporter of the Lancastrian cause, and throughout her reign was embroiled in schemes and conflicts. Although she fought for her husband's party she had little sympathy for his weak nature. Her only son was killed in a fatal poverty, and she in her last years lived in obscurity in France, a pensioner on the King's bounty.

Another proxy marriage that turned out ill was that of Anne of Brittany and Maximilian I, King of the Romans. Anne had succeeded her father at the age of twelve, and Maximilian, who had agreed with Henry VII. of England and France's II. of Aragon, to protect the youthful duchess in her rights, decided to go further and marry her. This he did by proxy, his ambassador putting a small leg into the couch of the duchess to conclude the performance of his duty as the representative of his royal master.

However, affairs were in such condition that Maximilian could not go to his bride or even defend her against the French, who were attempting to seize Brittany. Charles VIII. of France, seeing that Anne Duchess of Brittany, was fair as well as young, decided to marry her and thus unite the duchy with France. This, notwithstanding the fact espousals of Napoleon and Marie Louise in Vienna he was represented by his personal friend Berthier, and the Archduke Charles assisted in the name of the Emperor Francis.

A few days later the bride, accompanied by the Queen of Naples, started for France.

Near Solomons a horseman, modestly dressed, rode past her carriage, came back, looked in, descended, opened the door and introduced himself as the husband of the lady within.

The splendid marriage celebration took place in Paris. The ceremony was performed by the Emperor's uncle, Cardinal Richelieu, and there were great rejoicings, festivals and illuminations. At a ball given by Prince Schwarzenberg the temporary dancing hall caught on fire and several persons perished in the flames. This was regarded as a bad omen and many recalled the similar disaster at the festivities of the marriage of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette.

Marriage by proxy frequently furnished the theme for dramatic writings, songs and stories.

One of the children of "Tristan and Isolde" is that of the handsome knight sent by King Mark of Cornwall to act as his proxy in the marriage of the lovely Isolde, or Iselt. That knight, Tristan, loyal in his intentions, by the mere chance of drinking a potion not intended for him, and the lady whom he had wedded in his King's name found his soul irresistibly united to hers and hers to him.

The tragedy has been variously developed, but in no more gripping way than this.

Tennyson in his "Princess" has his hero say:

"Now it chanced that I had been. While life was yet in bud and blade, betrothed To one, a neighboring princess, she to me."

Was proxy wedded with a bootless calf at eight years old; and still from time to time Came murmurs of her beauty from the south."

The cruelest quest of his proxy bride and the final happy ending took the bitter taste left in the mouth by the namesake proxy weddings whose unhappy issue of which has darkened the pages of history.

Some Scenic Effects in the Bible

ALL the descriptions of a life apart from the body in the Bible are frankly metaphorical, whether their authors refer to life after death or to the experiences of dreams and visions.

Heaven is depicted under the simile of an abiding city from which death and pain and change are excluded, or reflected in the pastoral serenity of Palestine, fair pastures watered by the river of life, the leaves of whose trees are "for the healing of the nations."

In these fields we see those who "came out of great tribulations," and who now walk dry-eyed beside the Psalmist's "waters of comfort."

Plainly the writer had no thought that we could take him literally. His hope, his assurance, his emotion are facts, and he uses words as he might use colors because something forces him to express them.

The dead live—that has been revealed to him. He must assert it by picturing their life. We are less civilly minded to-day than the man whose patriotism controlled round a city. The glorious streets of the New Jerusalem make little impression upon us, but simple people still see the strong assurance through the glittering imagery and are still consoled.

The bulwarks of salvation remain, but the gates of pearl have been destroyed by literalism.

But theological scenery does not all depict consolation. Much of it expresses nothing but moral indignation and contrite fear. The Throne of Justice stands in heaven as on earth, and the awful severity of the conception is augmented by its very familiarity. We are shown a great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away."

Even literalism has not taken the life out of that picture, for all its literal impossibility.

"The wilderness of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God" still stands for a real emotion also, and so does the mysterious "mercy seat."

After all, what do we mean by a religious emotion but a divine communication? The recurrent accusations of memory which distress us all will never be better likened than to the "lying roll" swooping upon us unexpectedly from above with the unwelcome record we hoped we had forgotten.

National judgments also play a large part in theological scenery. The picture of the fall of Babylon may still rouse the envy of the philistine historian. "Babylon the great is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird."

She had said in her heart, "I sit a queen, and shall see no sorrow," but she was cast like a great millstone "into the sea." Thus "in one hour so great riches are come to naught, and is become the shipwreck, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off."

Nature's Gift to the South.
Nature has blessed the south with such a desirable climate; we can raise any form of foodstuffs here. We can raise the cattle and the foodstuffs to condition them at home. This brings the farmer closer to the market than the packing houses without the "feeding farm" middle man. It means that the farmer can raise many or few cattle and sell them at a high price. It means to sell. It means that he can grow his own corn at a low price, "finish" his cattle for market whenever he is ready, and send them coming in any season of the year he may desire it.

Diversified farming and cattle raising take least from the soil and put most into it. They are the best soil culture. Cotton takes all from the soil

When at last the annual meeting of the trustees came around again, it was unanimously chosen. In my judgment, it is an ideal arrangement. Miss Swanson declared, "I'm selling more than the working girls and the girls together. It not only shows the practical side of business to the girls, but encourages the working girls to study. It is really showing the number of girls who, after singing down town all day, come home innocent and then go out again to the evening class and the working girls take music, a few take while quite a number go to the high school which is in the next block." It is in so much as the purchase of the original property, just as the donors of the Rockefeller, Wellesley and similarly conducted colleges are. The board is paid for all they get, but they get a great deal for what they get. The management is able to give them so much because we do not aim to make even the smallest profit at the running expense.

For the most part the agreements then signed secure the same protection and immunities to hospital ships that the prior agreement secured to official relief forces on hand. In naval warfare the Red Cross can be of service chiefly in providing hospital ships which aim to remain as far as possible at a distance from the scene of battle, and by caring for the sick and wounded when transferred to hospitals on land.

Millions for Cupid and a Submarine

Miss Marie Busch, Whom Society Terms "a Charming Girl, With Plenty of Good, Common Sense." Drummond Jones, the Man She Loves, Went to Work for Her Father, and Though He Proposed to Her Twelve Times She Deferred Accepting Him Until He Had "Made Good." Papa Busch Says He Has Done So "With a Bang." And Everybody Is Happy.

D RUMMOND JONES of St. Louis has "made good." In the short space of six months, during which he laid aside all thoughts of tennis, the net champion advanced three rungs from the bottom of a clerical ladder, won the heart of an heiress and the esteem of her father, and now stands in a fair way to realize the ambition of his life—the making of a submarine engine that will "out-engine" any other in the navies of the world.

Young Jones is engaged to Miss Marie Busch, granddaughter of the late Adolphus Busch and daughter of August A. Busch, the St. Louis brewer. Thus has the pluck and courage of a wide-awake American youth triumphed over the attentions of many suitors from abroad—for Miss Busch, you must remember, is as popular on the other side of the water as she is in the land of her birth. The wedding was to take place on next Wednesday, but owing to the illness of Carl Busch, brother of Mr. Busch, the invitations were recalled.

"Drummy's" Romance.

Pages from a book of fiction contain no more heart thrills, no more romantic situations than were included in the wooing of "Drummy" Jones.

To begin: About five years ago "Drummy," with a number of friends, was motoring through St. Louis County. Fate (whether in the form of a punctured tire or overworked engine no one seems to remember) brought the car to a stop in front of Grant farm, the home of the Busch family. Some one in the party introduced young Jones to Mr. and Mrs. Busch and to the Busch children.

Among them was Miss Marie, then only 17 years old. It was love at first sight—at least on the part of "Drummy" Jones. But he had reached his majority only the year before, Miss Busch had not yet made her debut to society. The young man dismissed any serious intentions he might have had from his mind, though he became a frequent visitor at the home of the beautiful heiress.

He Joins Minstrels.

A year later "Drummy" put on a high silk hat and a frock coat and joined a minstrel troupe. No, not a professional aggregation, but a gathering of young St. Louisans chaotically inclined. They sang and danced for the benefit of the poor. In a box one evening sat the Busch family. Miss Marie applauded "Drummy's" singing—that much society noted. But she also applauded others on the program. Verily, it was a puzzle to determine if the pretty heiress gave a snap of two fingers for "Drummy" or any of a score of admirers.

When Marie Busch made her debut at Sunset Inn in 1912 young Jones formally declared war on her seeming indifference. He opened "hostilities" by proposing. Her exact reply is known only to two people—herself and "Drummy." But a short while later they were seen together at almost all functions that the heiress attended, but neither Miss Busch nor the young man would admit that an engagement existed.

Last fall "Drummy" walked into the office of August A. Busch. The conversation, so far as Mr. Jones can recall, went something like this:

"I want a position."
"Yes—go on."

August Busch Reveals How Young Drummond Jones "Made Good" in the Ranks—Won the Heart of an Heiress and Now the Brewer's Fortune Is Behind His Scheme to Revolutionize Naval Warfare.

"I want to work from the ground floor up. I have ambition and initiative. Place me somewhere to demonstrate this."

August A. Busch is nothing if not a business man. He is able to recognize a "find." Also he is a family man—devoted to his children. Away from the whirling wheels of industry he had found time to note that no mere friendship existed between his daughter and young Jones. So he killed two birds with one stone—he accepted the services of his "find" and added to his daughter's happiness.

After which Papa Busch and "Drummy" had a heart to heart talk, in which the word "submarine" played an important part.

Several days later young Jones appeared at the offices of the Busch-Sulzer Bros. Diesel Engine Company plant for work. He was detailed to the accounting department, figuring up costs and operating expenses. He sat at a high stool, as did the others, and attended strictly to business. And he did this same thing day after day.

Friends learned that "Drummy" was working for a salary. In the lobby of the theater, in the grillroom at the club, it was a choice morsel of gossip. The friends knew that young Jones had money of his own—that his income from adding figures in the engine plant wouldn't pay for his tips; so they put two and two together and said: "Drummy," old boy, has got to show Miss Busch that he can do other things besides play tennis. A charming girl, Miss Busch, with plenty of good, common sense.

A Slight Promotion.

A few months later Jones was put on another set of books—a bit more important task. Every so often, to use his own words, he proposed to Miss Busch.

"I think it was eleven times in all," he said. "Although it seemed to be a mutual understanding that we were going to be wedded, she deferred giving me a definite answer."

Next the ambitious young man was advanced to work on the ledger. The other evening, at a family dinner attended by fourteen members of the Busch family, the engagement was formally announced.

Evidently Miss Busch had decided that "Drummy" had "made good."

Papa Busch had decided that question a long time ago.

For Six Years Jones Was Tennis Champion in Doubles and Singles in the Central States Tournaments, and Still Retains the Title in Doubles in Both Tournaments. And to His Trophies He Now Adds Those Gained in Love and Business.

"He won me over the day he came into my office and asked for a job," said the wealthy brewer. "He didn't seek a job on the strength of being an acquaintance of my daughter, but upon the basis of 'I've got something to offer' in the way of conscientious services; how much am I bid?"

"He didn't brag about his ability. He merely asked for a chance to demonstrate it. Of course I knew that he had been associated with past enterprises with a degree of success."

"I said: 'Jones, I am going to take you at your word. You can begin at the bottom rung. When you show me that you have merited promotion you shall be promoted. That's your proposition, isn't it? There's an opportunity over there at the engine plant to make good with a bang.'"

And right here is where the heart to heart talk, in which the word "submarine" played an important part, came in.

"The stationary engine is not the only one manufactured over at the plant," said

Mr. Busch. "We also make an engine for submarines. I told this to young Jones and he became very enthusiastic."

Begins at Bottom.

"The making of good engines, including those for submarines, is now his one ambition. Necessarily he is beginning at the very root—the business end of the plant. He will forge ahead because he has brains and knows how to use them. The first down in the morning—one of the last to leave at night: that's young Jones. He's a live wire. Some day he will know enough about submarine engines to make his services invaluable."

Will his brain double the speed of the submarine?

Will his ambition be the means of revolutionizing naval warfare?

When Miss Busch accepted "Drummy" on his twelfth proposal he naturally went to talk it over with Mr. Busch.

"But," said young Jones, "I didn't ask him for his daughter's hand in marriage. That sort of talk wouldn't make a bit with him. I just said: 'Mr. Busch—' but what difference does it make what I said to him?"

"Anyway, I'm glad that Miss Busch has consented. You know she was no cinch to win, but I was a believer in the old adage, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.'"

Miss Busch is one of the five children of Mr. and Mrs. Busch. Her brother, Adolphus III, is older, and Clara, August Jr., and Alice are younger. She attended Hosmer Hall and studied under private tutors both in America and in Europe. Drummond Jones is the stepson of Mr. Clarence N. Jones of St. Louis. His father was killed several years ago by a discharged employe. For six years young Jones had been tennis champion in doubles and singles in the Central States Championship tournaments, but last year he lost the championship in singles but retained the title in doubles in both tournaments.

And to his trophies he now adds those gained in love and business.
